Twitter: Google+: Download the video here: We begin by looking at the imaging sensors and their responses to light. We take a brief trip around the cosmos and continue to the human eye where we discuss the lens and its design. We try to determine the color vision of a purple flower, a blue butterfly and an owl. www.oakLenses.com Thank you for watching. Preventing hot pixels in the sensor: 1. Make sure the camera is cooled down first. Turn off the camera during the hottest part of the day. 2. If the camera is left in a very hot place, such as a car or the hot sun, the lens can also get damaged. Wait until the camera is cooled off before using it. 3. When you're going outside during the hottest time of the day, try to avoid wearing dark clothes that will make you sweat a lot. You'll be able to take better pictures when your camera is fully cooled down.

- Usually DSLR cameras feature a strong keystone correction. This correction can lead to a lateral offset of some pixels. So called "hot pixels" are pixels that are always lit in the pictures. For video, this problem is even more critical. - With StuckVideoPixelRemover Crack For Windows you can use a list of defective pixels. During video rendering the defective
